INTRODUCTION

Sanskrit language has many unique features. One of these is that, although it is one of the most ancient languages extant in complete and unaltered form, it has up until very recently been a daily spoken language in parts of India. Indeed, even today it is possible to hear an up to the minute news bulletin broadcast daily on the radio in Sanskrit.

The form and structure of Sanskrit is regular and, furthermore, has been protected from change over thousands of years. This has been effected by means of a complex system of preservative measures ranging from the full scale grammatical analysis of Panini, (which has come down to us with the language and which records its every form and inflection), to a tradition of oral recitation religiously kept to over the generations by specially designated families. These families regularly compare their recitations with each other to ensure no change has occurred.

Sanskrit has a structure which lends itself to such scientific safeguards against change. It is remarkably regular (indeed, the word 'Sanskrit' means 'perfectly constructed') and each word can be analysed into root, prefixes and a simple but flexible system of suffixes which culminate in a series of inflections signifying gender, number and case. As well as lending themselves to analysis into their constituent parts, Sanskrit words also combine into larger units according to a system of compounding, again codified in an eminently intelligent way. Mastery of the simple rules for all these processes is an education in itself in intelligence and order. This language is so scientific that it is the only spoken tongue which has been seriously considered for use as an artificial language in computers. All these factors make Sanskrit grammar an ideal structural model from which to understand other languages, both classical and modern.

The literature of Sanskrit is extensive and rich, composed in a variety of styles. It embodies the world-picture of a civilization sufficiently different from our own to allow and encourage comparison and evaluation of both civilizations. This is a valuable exercise and engagement in such discussion is an important factor in the course.

AIMS AND OBJECTIVES

Our objectives in teaching this language are as follows:

- To practise the fluent pronunciation of the Sanskrit language
- To train the students in the fluent writing and reading of the beautiful Devanagari script in which Sanskrit is usually written
- To give a thorough grounding in the grammar of the sentence
- To demonstrate the unique system of word-analysis innate within the Sanskrit language
- To introduce the close relationship of Sanskrit with English, Greek, Latin and most other European languages
- To train students in the system of sandhi, whereby words in Sanskrit are 'euphonically' joined, as happens in all spoken languages, but is rarely formally acknowledged
- To introduce at first hand some of the finest literature of the Sanskrit epic tradition
- To make known the various branches of extant Sanskrit literature, their content, style and relationship within the Sanskrit corpus as a whole
- To introduce and discuss the ideals, beliefs and social structure of the civilization which used this remarkable language
- To discuss its inherent metaphysical concepts

By the time they sit the Sanskrit exam at IGCSE level the pupils are studying original verses from the Bhagavad Gita, a world acclaimed spiritual classic, as well as prose fables in Sanskrit from the Hitopadesha. By this stage, too, they have become practised in translating simple Sanskrit into English and vice versa.
For the A Level exam, the standard of work is more challenging and the literature includes verses from the Laws of Manu, the Upanishads and also extracts from the commentaries of the great philosopher Shankara.

SANSKRIT FOR THOSE JOINING IN YEAR 7

This is a pilot scheme that is being developed at present. We are experimenting with a draft 'Year 7' text book, which will be documented fully when we are fully decided upon the content needed. This is available from the ISER website.

Year 7

During the Autumn Term we give pupils a taste of some of the great philosophical concepts of the Sanskrit tradition, as well as introducing them to some key Sanskrit words and to the beautiful Sanskrit alphabet. A small amount of optional homework is set each week. It is hoped that those who wish to pursue Sanskrit will use this opportunity to reinforce what they have studied in the lessons.

At the end of the Autumn Term, those pupils who have demonstrated a reasonable aptitude for the language are invited to continue with it in the Spring and Summer Terms. In these terms there are two periods a week for those who accept the invitation, during which progress is made with the Sanskrit language and further insights into the rich philosophical tradition are offered.

Years 8 and 9

At the end of the Summer Term in Year 7, a smaller number of pupils are invited to continue with Sanskrit in Years 8 and 9. These linguistically able pupils will need, if they wish to opt for this subject at GCSE level, to be at the same standard by the end of Year 9 as those pupils in their year group who have been studying Sanskrit since the Junior School.

Pupils who accept this invitation will already be studying French and Latin, and may be invited to study Greek, so will not be offered Spanish in Years 8 and 9. However, if four or more pupils in the year group who are studying Sanskrit wish to study Spanish as well, this can be made available from the beginning of Year 10.

There are two lessons a week. In addition, pupils are set work to do in the school library during the two lessons a week when Spanish is timetabled.

Years 10 and 11

Pupils who perform sufficiently well in the examination at the end of Year 9 can opt for the IGCSE Sanskrit course in Years 10 and 11, joining those pupils who have come from our Junior School. The IGCSE is a prestigious examination offered by Cambridge International Examinations which equips pupils with the ability to read texts such as the Bhagavad Gita in the original Sanskrit, as well as offering them a broad understanding of the philosophy and civilization presented in Sanskrit literature.
